

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A method of decoding variable length codes converts a variable length code table into standard format decomposition tables from which a universal variable length decoder can decode. This allows the same universal variable length decoder to decode any variable length code. The memory required to store the standard format decomposition tables is minimized by the conversion process.